

Why Learn English as a Second Language

Learning a new language is often begun at a young age and, in some schools, is continued throughout a person's education. While it may be easier to learn and retain a second language at a younger age, those who are interested in learning a second language later on in life should not be discouraged. In fact, the older a person gets, the more apparent the need for the English language becomes. Consider the following instances in which mastery of the English language is crucial for success.

1. Obtaining a job in an English speaking country, or having to frequently interact with English speaking colleagues overseas. With trading between countries is at a high, people are expected to speak more than one language in order to ensure the completion of a transaction. This means that English as a second language is becoming more common and expected in the business community.
2. Anyone moving to a country that is predominantly English speaking will need to master the English language to complete daily tasks and communicate with others on a daily basis. Without having knowledge of the English language it may be very frustrating to complete simple tasks and interact with others.
3. For parents new to an English speaking country, learning English will not only benefit the parent, but children as well. When children are exposed to English in an academic environment, they typically bounce back between speaking a primary language at home and English in school. When parents commit to learning English as a second language it provides a bonding experience between the parent and English speaking child, and makes communicating with the child's school much easier.
